Quarterly COVID-19 Brief
July 3, 2025

The purpose of this brief is to provide an update on recent coronavirus activity in the City of Cleveland, Ohio. This brief uses data from March 30, 2025 through June 28, 2025, representing the 2nd quarter of 2025.

What Matters Most

- COVID-19 activity is holding steady after a significant decrease in hospitalizations, ER visits, and cases during the month of April.
- Wastewater test results in mid-June showed a high and increasing level of COVID in Cleveland's wastewater, signaling a potential jump in the amount of COVID circulating in the community. However, this jump isn't reflected in hospitalizations, ER visits, or reported cases, which could mean the severity of acute illness remained low during this time period.
- Getting your yearly COVID vaccine is the best way to protect yourself and the people around you. Vaccine protection decreases over time, so it is important to get your 2024-2025 COVID vaccine even if you got vaccinated in past years.
- Taking steps like choosing to wear a mask and practicing good hand hygiene can further lower your risk of COVID-19 infection. Even a mild case of COVID can lead to Post-Acute COVID-19 Syndrome (also called long COVID), so it's best to avoid infection altogether.

In the 2nd quarter of 2025, Cleveland had...

363 Reported Cases	8 Hospitalizations	3 Deaths

Wastewater Testing

As of June 24th

Wastewater Treatment Facility	Levels of COVID in Wastewater
NEORSD Easterly WWTP	Steady
NEORSD Southerly WWTC	Increasing
NEORSD Westerly WWTC	Steady

Our best metrics for assessing the current level of COVID activity are emergency room (ER) visits, hospital admissions, and wastewater test results. COVID case counts are no longer a good metric for several reasons, like the widespread use of unreported at-home tests and a reduction in testing overall. However, watching the general patterns of the rise and fall of reported cases can add to our understanding of local COVID activity.

June 5, 2025 - Cleveland - For the first time in history, the City of Cleveland recognizes HIV Long-Term Survivors Awareness Day (HLTSAD), honoring long-term survivors of HIV and raising health issues, and journeys. The annual observance lands on the anniversary of the first reported cases of HIV, which became known as AIDS.

"An official recognition of HIV Long-Term Survivors Day in Cleveland has been a long time coming," said Robert Toth, Commissioner of Health Equity & Social Justice. "The collaboration of City partners, and several long-term survivors has set the stage for a meaningful acknowledgment and dedication of so many in our community."

HIV long-term survivors include people who have lived with HIV for 10 years or longer since birth or young children, and people who were diagnosed with HIV before therapy (ART) in 1996.

"Today is a melancholy day. We are remembering those who have gone before us of all long-term survivors living with AIDS and HIV," said Robert Toth, community Cleveland's HLTSAD. "As a senior citizen and a 36-year survivor living with AIDS, I know how I can, where I can, when I can, u
